THE FREER GALLERY OF ART AND THE ARTHUR M SACKLER GALLERY: WORLD WAR II ERA PROVENANCE PROJECT, 1933-1945

The Freer Gallery of Art and the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery of the Smithsonian Institution recently initiated a comprehensive provenance research project. Its goal is to identify and clarify questions of ownership history for the Galleries’ Asian artworks that were created before 1946 and acquired after 1932; underwent a change of ownership between 1933 and 1945; and were, or might have been, in continental Europe during that twelve-year period. The project represents a long-term commitment to research as fully as possible the provenance of all objects in any media within the Freer and the Sackler collections that have gaps in ownership history or may have been subject to questionable transfer of ownership or unlawful appropriation during the World War II era.

This project advances the Smithsonian’s ongoing and serious commitment to undertake provenance research of its collections consistent with the directives issued by the American Association of Museums (AAM) and the Association of Art Museum Directors (AAMD). To this end, the Freer and Sackler Galleries are working to identify objects in their collections of Asian art that fall under the scope of the AAM and AAMD guidelines. This research will be published on the Freer and Sackler’s website as well as the Smithsonian Institution’s provenance website (http://provenance.si.edu/jsp/index.aspx), with links to AAM’s Nazi-Era Provenance Internet Portal (NEPIP: http://www.nepip.org/). In this way, the Smithsonian will expand its dedication to making information about the history of its collections available and transparent to researchers and the general public.

The project will pioneer new methods and standards of provenance research for non-Western (specifically, Asian) objects and facilitate ongoing exchange between the specialists at the Freer and Sackler and those working with other Asian collections who are grappling with similar issues and challenges.

Historical Context
During the tumultuous years before and during World War II, the Nazi regime and its collaborators orchestrated a system of confiscation, coercive transfer, looting, and destruction of cultural objects in Europe on an unprecedented scale. Millions of art objects and other cultural items were unlawfully and often forcibly removed from their rightful owners. While many of these confiscated items were returned to their owners through extensive postwar restitutions, some continue to appear on the legitimate art market and make their way into private and public collections.

Beginning in 1998, AAM and AAMD issued guidelines for museums concerning objects that may have been illegally confiscated during the World War II era. In an agreement reached with the Presidential Advisory Commission on Holocaust Assets in 2000, AAM and AAMD further recommended that museums make all currently available information accessible to online researchers to aid the discovery and identification of any objects that were unlawfully appropriated during that time. Under these recommendations, museums should identify works in their collections that were created before 1946 and acquired after 1932; underwent change of ownership between 1933 and 1945; and were, or might reasonably be thought to have been, in continental Europe between those years.

AAM’s Nazi-Era Provenance Internet Portal (http://www.nepip.org/) was created to provide a publicly accessible database of museum objects with gaps in their provenance between 1933 and 1945.

Provenance Research
The study of provenance—the history of ownership of a work of art—provides insights into the history of taste and collecting, illuminating the social, economic, and historic trends in which an artwork was created or collected. Researching the provenance of collections is a fundamental aspect of curatorial work.

Despite intensive scholarly provenance research, which is often a lengthy and difficult process, the full succession of ownership cannot always be entirely documented. This is due to a multitude of reasons. Over time, some records and documents were lost or destroyed. Sometimes, no records of transfer were created or retained. Often private collectors bought and sold objects anonymously through third parties, such as dealers or auction houses that are no longer in business.

World War II era provenance research is specialized work that seeks to determine whether any objects that have entered the museums’ collections after 1932 could have been unlawfully seized by the Nazis and not subsequently restored to the rightful owners or their heirs. If full and unbroken documented provenance is not available for this time period, however, it is possible that the complete ownership history cannot be reconstructed; such a result is commonplace. Gaps in provenance of objects posted on this website indicate the current state of research but in no way signify uncertain provenance or unlawful appropriation during the World War II era.

Provenance research is a continuous and ongoing process, and object information will be updated or a regular basis to reflect our research. This website ultimately will include all Freer and Sackler objects, not just those with gaps in ownership. We welcome queries on the provenance of works in our collection; if you have any information or questions, please write to:

How to Read Provenance Entries

- Provenance for artworks in the Freer and Sackler collections is listed in chronological order, beginning with the earliest known owner.

- Relationships between owners and methods of transactions are indicated when known.

- Footnotes are used to document or clarify information.

- Dates reflect the beginning and ending dates of ownership and are modified by prepositions when necessary, following the examples below:

  From 1945 to 1970
  The work was in this collection from 1945 to 1970.

  From 1945
  The work entered this collection in 1945, but we do not know when it left.

  From at least 1945
  We know the work was in this collection from 1945, but it may have entered earlier.

  To 1945
  We do not know when the work entered this collection, but it left in 1945.

  To at least 1945 (can be combined with a beginning date)
  We know the work was still in this collection in 1945, but it may have left at a later date.

  1945
  The work was only in the collection for one year.

  About 1877
  The work was in the collection around this time, and no more specific information is known.

  1940s / early 1940s / mid-1940s / late 1940s
  The work is known to have been in the collection, but only a decade or part of a decade is known.

  18th century / early 18th century / mid-18th century / late 18th century
  The work is known to have been in a collection, but only a century or part of a century is known.

  [blank date]
  A collection name with no date given indicates that we do not know precisely when the work was in this collection. We know the work was in this collection between the owners listed above and below it, but other unknown owners may have been in the chain of ownership.
